LARGE MEETING ROOM

Dr. Boyajian will talk about the total solar eclipse — happening on early April 2024. She will cover the science and the significance of this rare celestial event, as well as its beauty and viewing logistics. She will present how the study and observation of eclipses of objects beyond our solar system helps us understand our universe.

Libraries Change Lives

Features:

Marian Griffin

Libraries Change Lives

Ever since she was a little girl, Marian Griffin loved to sit at the feet of older family members and listen to stories about her ancestors. By paying close attention, Marian was able to capture her ancestor's oral history and eventually write and publish dozens of books. Each one of her books covers either her family or her husband's family and their experiences. Marian shares, "The books aren't just about my family but family in general." Marian's first published book, Cultural Gumbo: Our Roots, Our Stories, goes back to the era before Africans were brought west as slaves. Her inspiration for writing is so that her children, grandchildren, and the world can learn, not just their family history, but also Black history.

When Marian began her writing journey, she went to the Library to find books on topics related to certain time periods and family members. The librarians in the Black Heritage Room at the Scotlandville Branch Library offered much assistance in her pursuits. When Marian wanted specific information about her mother-in-law for her book, a staff member pointed her in the direction of the Louisiana Archives where she was able to find information that she used in her book, Cultural Gumbo. "Whatever topic I asked for, they would research it, and then I would go find the books." With many of her books highlighting family, much of her research included looking for her ancestors to fill in the gaps. "I also took a computer course at the Main Library, and I learned a plethora of information about how to research ancestors."

With all of the help Marian received, she was able to complete her books and decided to dedicate a couple of her books to the librarians that helped her so much along the way. Her dedication in Cultural Gumbo: Our Roots, Our Stories states: "I am grateful to the genealogy staff in the East Baton Rouge Parish Main Library on Goodwood Boulevard and the library staff, Carol, Chad, and Jennifer at the Scotlandville Branch Library on Scenic Highway, Baton Rouge, Louisiana, who are commended for their assistance in researching data." Marian encourages other authors to use the Library as a resource "because I feel that they're going to steer you in the right direction to get the information that you need."
